

23rd June 2026

Hi all

I'm really sorry to say that school will be closed on Wednesday and Thursday this week because of the Red Heat Alert. I know — two whole days without lessons at Brynteg... I can already hear the collective groan of disappointment from you all.

As you know, in all my time here I have always tried my very best to keep the school open for you. But the temperatures we are expecting over the next two days are simply too dangerous, and it would not be safe for pupils or staff to be in the building.

I know it's a real shame that events have had to be postponed this week. We were all looking forward to the Bryn It Together and Pride Festivals tomorrow, and I will be speaking with staff to explore whether these can be rearranged in the coming weeks.

We'll be back in as normal on Friday, and I'm genuinely looking forward to seeing you all then.

During the closure, your teachers will be setting work on Google Classroom, Seesaw and the other platforms you normally use. Please make sure you complete this; learning doesn't stop just because the weather has decided to be this challenging.

Most importantly, stay safe. Avoid being outside during the hottest parts of the day, drink plenty of water, and look after yourselves and each other.

I'm really sorry I have had to make this decision, but it's absolutely the right one. It is better to be safe, cool and well — and ready to return on Friday.

Best wishes

Headteacher
